

Pledge of Allegiance

I the undersigned, a married man, do hereby pledge to fight women to gain power over them until a balance is achieved, both in public and in private life, such that men once again can think and speak for themselves. I will then continue to fight this sex war to maintain that balance, for as long as I shall live. To establish truth, at every opportunity (yet with the utmost civility) I will:

- deny equality and equality of opportunity between the sexes
- champion male symbols, institutions, strengths and virtues
- often say something sexist (but true) about womankind
- assert authority in my home to control my wife and children
- discipline misbehaving women and women's organisations
- judge when women lie, and punish them until they apologise
- discipline bad behaviour rather than be kind (e.g. single mothers)

To build trust, I will also at the same time:

- talk truthfully to strangers, especially ladies, to discover truth
- respect female symbols, institutions, strengths and virtues
- acknowledge our equal value as human beings, once a day
- interfere and risk death to help maintain public order
- cherish and protect my family and the local community
- treat all well-behaved ladies with gallantry and chivalry

I submit my reasons for joining the Society, to be kept on record and available for public scrutiny, together with my name and address. As a founding member of the Society I hope my action will inspire others to follow suit.

I will display this pledge prominently in my home, whether or not my wife agrees, and protect it from harm until I die -- for handing down to my children.

I understand the Society has no other purpose than to act as a public registry of married men committed to the above principles of behaviour, and as a repository for their reasons for joining.
